Annex 1

Definition

Suspicious transaction means a transaction conducted or attempted by, at, or through the Gaming Operation that the Gaming Facility Operator knows, suspects, or has reason to suspect. A transaction which is inconsistent with a customer's known legitimate business or personal activities or with the normal business for the type of securities holdings or contract which the customer holds.

Failure to comply with the requirements of this section may constitute a violation of the reporting rules of the Curacao (formerly Netherland Antilles) Gaming Authority and will result in immediate revocation of License.

How to identify a Suspicion?

An effective systemic approach to identifying suspicious financial activity may safeguard you from the risk of being involved with terrorist financing and money laundering crimes. Use the "SAFE" approach which may assist you in legal compliance and staff training.

- S: Screen
- A: Ask customer
- F: Find
- E: Evaluate

Each of the four steps of the systemic approach to suspicious activity identification are discussed in more detail in the following paragraphs.

Screen: Screen the account for suspicious indicators

The recognition of an indicator, or better still indicators, of suspicious activity is the first step in the suspicious activity identification system. The following are some of the suspicious activity indicators most commonly associated with money laundering.

Large or frequent cash transaction, either deposits or withdrawals.

- Suspicious activity based on transaction pattern, i.e.
- Involvement of one or more of the following entities which are commonly involved in money laundering,
- Currencies, countries or national of countries, commonly associated with international crime or drug trafficking or identified as having serious deficiencies in their AML / CFT regimes,
- Customer refuses, or is unwilling, to provide explanation of financial activity, or provides explanation assessed to be untrue.
- Activity is incommensurate with that expected from the customer considering the information already known to you about the customer and the customers previous financial activity
- Countries or nationals of countries, commonly associated with terrorist activities or the persons or organizations designated as terrorists or their associates. Details can be found on the website about sanction on terrorists or their associates.
- Politically Exposed Persons (PEPs)

Ask: Ask the customer appropriate questions

- If your staff carries out a transaction or transactions for a customer, bearing one or more suspicious activity indicators then they should question the customer on the reason for conducting the transaction and the identity of the source and ultimate beneficiary of the money being transacted.
- On occasions some of the staff may be reluctant to ask questions of the type mentioned above. Grounds for this reluctance are that the customer may realize that he, or she, is suspected of illegal activity, or regards such questions as none of the questioner's business.
- Appropriate questions to ask in order to obtain an explanation of the reason for conducting a transaction bearing suspicious activity indicators will depend upon the circumstances of the financial activity observed.
- Another example is when a customer receives "structured" remittances from overseas. In such circumstances staff could question the customer on the reason for receiving numerous remittances within a short period of time on the grounds that one larger remittance would be quicker, cheaper for the sender to send, and less time consuming for the recipient to handle.
- Persons engaged in legitimate business generally have no objection to, or hesitation in answering such questions. Persons involved in illegal activity are more likely to refuse to answer, give only a partial explanation or give an explanation which is unlikely to be true.
- If a customer is unwilling, or refuses, to answer questions or gives replies which staff suspect are incorrect or untrue, this may be taken as a further indication of the suspicious nature of the financial activity.

Find: Find out the customer's records

- The third stage in the systemic approach to suspicious activity identification is to review the information already known about the customer and his, or her, previous transactions and consider this information to decide if the apparently suspicious activity is to be expected from the customer. This stage is commonly known as the "know your customer principle".
- Institutions, businesses or professions hold various pieces of information on their customers which can be useful when considering if the customers' financial activity is to be expected or is unusual. Examples of some of these information items and the conclusions which may be drawn from them are listed below.

Evaluate: Evaluate all the above information.

- The final step in the suspicious activity identification system is the decision whether or not to make an STR. Due to the fact that suspicion is difficult to quantify, it is not possible to give exact guidelines on the circumstances in which an STR should, or should not, be made. However, such a decision will be of the highest quality when all the relevant circumstances are known to, and considered by, the decision maker, i.e. when all three of the preceding steps in the suspicious transaction identification system have been completed and are considered. If, having considered all the circumstances, staff find the activity genuinely suspicious then an STR should be made.
- Staff will seldom, if ever, encounter a situation in which a customer carries out apparently suspicious activity which they have reason to suspect is linked to a specific crime or type of crime. Institutions, businesses or professions are therefore encouraged to make STRs in circumstances where, although they do not know which specific crime or type of crime is connected to the suspicious transaction, there are one or more suspicious activity indicators present, together with an inability or unwillingness on the part of the customer to give a reasonable and legitimate explanation and inconsistency between the financial activity undertaken and that which is to be expected from the customer.

What to Report in an STR?

A STR should include the following details:

- personal particulars (name, identity card or passport number, date of birth, address, telephone number, bank account number) of the person(s) or company involved in the suspicious transaction;
- details of the suspicious financial activity;
- the reason why the transaction is suspicious - which suspicious activity indicators are present?
- the explanation, if any, given by the person about the transaction
